FROM DEAN MATASAR

Long time, no write. I'm baaack.

Paranoia sets in this time of year. So it is time for some soothing words from the Dean.

For all First-Year Students--This legal education business is much tougher than you may have thought. You study hard, put in excessive hours, and when it's all said and done, you still have no idea if you have learned anything or not. You go to class, prepared. Then the Professor starts out by asking a question having to do with some subject you thought about studying in undergraduate school, but decided against. A million questions get asked, but no answers ever are given in class. Worse yet, you can't figure out what the question is that you can't find the answer to.

Welcome to the first-year of law school. Now relax (at least a little bit); it will get better. Law students (and lawyers) must learn to live with ambiguity. Legal problems are unclear. That's the point. If a solution were obvious, we wouldn't need lawyers. We certainly wouldn't have lengthy court opinions. Most significantly, we wouldn't torment you by needlessly creating false ambiguities. The real world of the law is often a shade of grey. That, of course, is why law is so wonderful an institution that adapts, and changes. Because we can argue legitimately about legal questions, law can grow. (That law is often ambiguous and adaptable also allows lawyers on two sides to have clients and dare I say fees.) So, don't beat yourself up about not knowing the answers to questions. Neither does anyone else. Revel in uncertainty. Make it your friend. So long as you can construct the argument on either side of a dispute, and understand why there is a dispute, you have gone a long way to becoming an accomplished law student.

To Upper Level Students--You probably just skipped the last two paragraphs and yearn with great nostalgia for the blissful ignorance of the first year. You know that real paranoia does not set in until you begin THE JOB SEARCH. The fall is a scary time for all upper-level law students. Reality check has set in: despite your exceedingly obvious talent, you must search for a job.

I will not kid you. The employment market is tight. The very best of you may experience some discomfort in finding the right job. Many of you will struggle to find a satisfactory job. Unfortunately, some of you may have real difficulty in finding any suitable employment. Yet, as we all know, when your searching is over, most of you will be hard-working, gainfully employed, full-fledged contributing alums!

Getting the right job requires diligence as well a willingness to be bold. People will not just seek you out and provide you with riches. You must work hard to market yourself. Fortunately, the placement office will help you.

More important, however, you must develop flexibility. The same five law firms will not hire every graduate or second year student from this law school. Nor is it sensible to expect that Cook County can absorb every local graduate, every year. The practice of law is thriving in many communities outside of Chicago, its suburbs, and even Illinois. Our law school's reputation is growing everywhere. To make it even better, however, some of you must be willing to be pilgrims, evangelists, and wanderers, who will take our name to alien places like New York, Washington, Minneapolis, Cleveland, and even for goodness sake, California! Opportunities exist for those who wish to go on an "excellent adventure."

As I close this week's missive, don't forget why you are here. This is a wonderful place to learn. This is a law school. Be inquisitive. Study. Retain enthusiasm. Work hard. And, last but not least, take time out when you need it, to recharge and fight the good fight another day.

Student Insurance

The bill you recently received may show the $80 semi-annual charge for the student insurance. You may still decline the student insurance if you have other insurance. The declination form, available in the College Office, room 301, must be received by GM Underwriters on or before Monday, September 30.

If your award letter listed a Perkins Loan and you have not yet signed your promissory notes, the notes will be in the Registrar's Office until October 4. At that time, the promissory notes will be returned to the Student Loan Office at the main campus. The loan will not be applied to your account until all required documents have been signed.
